Julius arrived in Denmark eager to expand his knowledge of modern dairy farming. At Iglsø Agro Landbrug, he quickly adapted to the structured and technology-driven operations. From managing automated milking systems to ensuring the health of high-yield dairy cows, Julius has gained practical skills that set him apart.

"Back home, I only knew traditional dairy farming, but here I have learned so much about herd management, nutrition, and breeding. I now understand how precision farming improves milk production. This experience has changed my career forever."

Julius hopes to return to Uganda and introduce sustainable dairy practices to improve local milk production.

2. Nabangi Racheal – Dairy Farming in Holstebro

For Racheal, working on a large-scale dairy farm in Holstebro was a dream come true. She has spent months mastering cow milking processes, health monitoring, and farm management systems.

"I used to think dairy farming was just about feeding cows and milking them, but now I see how technology plays a huge role. From feeding programs to cow tracking systems, every detail matters. I am grateful for this exposure!"

She plans to share her newfound knowledge with farmers in her community, introducing efficient and profitable dairy farming techniques.

3. Kibet Ediger – Piggery Farming in Silkeborg

"I have learned how to properly handle pigs at different growth stages, ensure disease control, and use technology for monitoring their health. This internship has given me the confidence to start my own piggery business when I return home."

Kibet believes that biosecurity measures and modern pig farming techniques can revolutionize pig farming in Uganda, ensuring better productivity and profits.
